

farandicus

original, soulful, funky tunes made in New Zealand

about

Farandicus are a six-piece (sometime seven-piece) band based in Northland, New Zealand. Combining the varied musical backgrounds of all members, the Farandicus sound is smooth, clean and soulful. Currently at work on their first full length release, the group plays a tight set of original music. Their songs are varied, and can be hard to pin down to a specific genre, but the soul and funk influences shine through most clearly.

Blue Funk: An upbeat depression song that conveys the frustration of knowing you're on your way down but being powerless to pull yourself out of it. Instead, you let go and get swept away by the darkness and the disconnection from the rest of the world. The contrast between the lyrics and the music reflects the contrast between how you feel and how you present yourself to the world.

What to Give: That moment when you see some person with a clipboard down the street and you know they're gonna ask you for money. Their questions leave you feeling totally exposed and unable to say no. Similarly, when you're online and a website asks you to sign up, you're a bit unsure about how much info to give out, but doesn't everyone else do it? Do you use your real details? Argh the pressure!
